

David Hite

David Hite is currently an assistant professor of Business at Bluefield College. Previously, he was Manager of Training and Organizational Development for Roadrunner Markets which had over 750 employees in 90 stores. He taught college and also served as an HR business consultant over the past 20 years. He has worked with dozens of small businesses as well as helped organizations, such as Volkswagon, Eastman Chemical Company, Tennessee Valley Authority, and The University of Tennessee, enhance their operations through the use of human resource development strategies and web technology.

David has an associate degree in Computer Science, a BS degree in Workforce Education and Training (minor in Psychology), and a M.S. degree in HR Management from the University of Tennessee with concentrations in Organizational Development and Instructional eLearning technologies. David has studied business in over 30 countries. Currently, he is working on his doctorate in Leadership and Organizational learning at George Washington University.